A violent Seattle Antifa associate has finally been arrested over the June 14 beating independent journalist, Cam Higby.

Higby was covering an Antifa anti-ICE direct action attack on a federal building in downtown Seattle when he was identified and beaten on the head. Higby and journalist Katie Daviscourt later identified the suspect, who was caught on camera partially unmasked, as 33-year-old Jeremy Calvin Lawson. He uses the alias “Jack.” no arrest came for weeks.

I spoke with Higby who reported that he was treated twice for injuries from the assault. The morning after the attack, Higby woke up with a nosebleed so significant it soaked his bed sheets. This had never happened to him before, so he went to Urgent care the morning after the attack.

The doctors at Urgent Care diagnosed him with a mild to moderate concussion. They warned him that if his symptoms got worse he should immediately go to an Emergency Room as head injuries are extremely dangerous and could indicate a slow brain bleed. At 0300 on 06/16/2025, Higby was struck with a debilitating headache, flashing lights, dizziness and nausea. Higby had one of his friends immediately take him to the Emergency Room. Fortunately, Higby did not have a brain bleed.

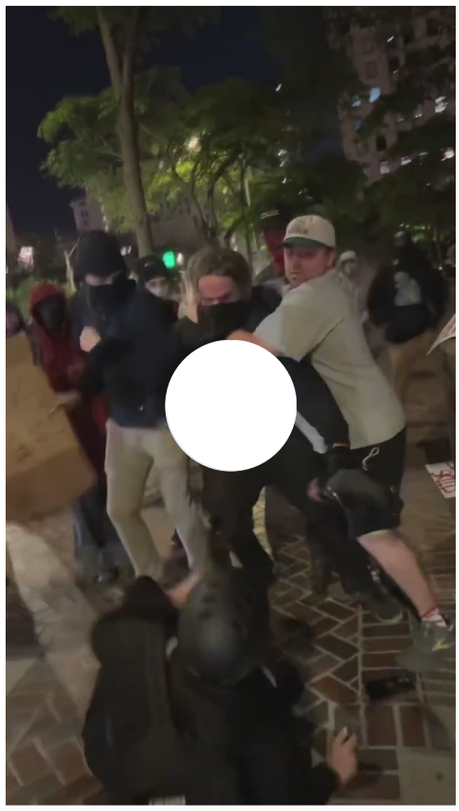
Video of part of the June 14 Antifa attack in downtown Seattle:



“The defendant’s actions following the assault are quite concerning to the State,” wrote prosecutor Ian Michels-Slettvet in the criminal complaint. “The defendant posted photos of the victim on social media and expressed support for the assault. H also texted the victim, indicating that he knew where the victim lived. Shortly after texts, personal details about the victim – including his address and the names of relatives – were posted online.”

According to the SPD report, Lawson allegedly worked with another individual nam Tyler Stubbs-Han (born. Sept. 3, 1996). Stubbs-Han has not yet been charged with a crimes.

Tyler Stubbs-Han is allegedly an accomplice in the beating but he has not been charged

"Higby, was grabbed around the neck and then began taking punches to the head," reads the probable cause statement from police. "In the middle of the assault, a nea person began recording. In the recording a tall skinny W/M with blond dreadlocks c be seen vigorously striking Higby in the head multiple times."

Weeks before the arrest, an X account believed to belong to Jeremy Lawson incited violence against Cam Higby

At Lawson's arraignment on July 17, the judge set his bail at $75,000 — very high fo liberal King County — due to him having a history of having a restraining order against him.

"The court finds there's a likelihood of a future violent act," the judge warned.
